

SPR is Powered by You!

If you think about it, most things we rely on are invisible. Airwaves, electricity, the human voice carried across miles. Spokane Public Radio is like that, too—always there, waiting, shaping our days in ways we don't always notice.

SPR is a voice on the radio when you wake up, reliable national and local news on your drive home from work, and quality music to have as a companion during your daily activities. SPR is here for the entire Inland Northwest.

You've ensured those voices don't disappear. Because of you, the stories keep coming, the news gets told, and the music plays on. SPR is powered by our members, and your support is essential!

Have you considered becoming a sustaining member? A monthly gift is easy to set up with a checking account, credit/debit card or your banks online bill pay. There are so many ways to give! Have you considered adding SPR to your giving plan? Consider donating via your IRA RMD, QCD or adding SPR to your estate plan or will.

The Guide

Your Connection to Spokane Public Radio
Volume 46 / No. 2 April to June 2026
Community Voices Strengthen SPR

In a time when information is everywhere—but trust can feel harder to find—one message has come through clearly in our recent audience research: our communities value local, reliable news more than ever.

Across the Inland Northwest, listeners told us they depend on Spokane Public Radio to help them understand what's happening in their neighborhoods, their schools, their governments, and their lives. They want journalism that is rooted here—reporting that reflects the people, issues, and perspectives that make this region unique. We will be focusing our energies on building up our newsroom to better serve our communities.

President and GM John M. Decker

That insight reinforces what has long guided our work. We are deeply invested in every community we serve, from Spokane to Sandpoint, Coeur d'Alene to Twisp, and throughout the many towns and rural areas that connect us. Our commitment is not just to broadcast into these communities, but to be present in them—to listen, to engage, and to reflect their stories with accuracy and care.

This summer, we're taking that commitment on the road. You'll find myself and others from Spokane Public Radio at area farmers' markets throughout the region, where we look forward to meeting you, hearing what matters most to you, and sharing more about the work we do. We'll also be hosting a series of "Coffee and Conversation" gatherings with me in communities including Sandpoint, Coeur d'Alene, Twisp, and Spokane Valley, along with additional stops to be announced.

These informal gatherings are an opportunity to connect directly—to ask questions, share ideas, and talk about the future of public radio in your community.

Details, dates, and locations for all of these events will be posted on our website as they are finalized. I hope you'll take a moment to join us when we're in your area.

Public radio is strongest when it reflects and includes the voices of the people it serves. Thank you for being part of that mission, and for helping us continue to build a trusted, community-centered service for the Inland Northwest.

-John M. Decker, President and General Manager
