Davidson Family - Strawberry Hill Dance ~ 1918

About the Photo - “Strawberry Hill Dance - 1918” captures a milestone in the Davidson family’s Wyoming story, rooted in the journey of Even and Astri Lee, who immigrated from Norway in 1877 and 1887, respectively. After marrying in Willow, ND in 1888 and raising three children, the couple moved to Crook County in 1917, where their two sons homesteaded side by side.

History - The dance shown here celebrated the completion of eldest son Ole Lee’s cabin in 1918 – a classic moment of community cheer. Ole later married Allegra Nemetz in 1923, and their daughter Ruth, born in this very cabin in 1924, carried the family legacy forward when she married fellow Crook County native Stanley Davidson. Their son, Keith, continued the lineage, raising four children and later welcoming five grandchildren – Even and Astri’s 3x great-grandchildren. More than a century after this dance, much of the original cabin still stands on the homestead and remains in the hands of the Davidson family, who were honored with the Wyoming SHPO Centennial Farm & Ranch designation in 2017. The photograph represents not only a celebration in 1918, but the enduring connection of six generations to the land that became their home.

Holly Sandefer - Desert Exhale

Biography – Holly Sandefer was born and raised in Casper, and has lived in several places across the great state of Wyoming. She is happiest outdoors—hiking, biking, camping, stargazing, snowshoeing, capturing nature’s beauty, collecting rocks, or simply breathing in the fresh, crisp Wyoming air. To Holly, Wyoming is a true wonderland.

About the Photo – Holly’s photograph, “Desert Exhale,” was taken in Pinedale, WY, on a peaceful fall evening. She had ventured out to soak in the colors and breathe in the fresh autumn air. As the sun was slowly setting, Holly noticed a striking reflection in the window of a small building nestled in the prairie, with the Wind River Range standing in the background. The contrast in colors caught her eye and made her stop and stare in awe.

History – Pinedale has a vast history of exploration, fur trapping and trading, ranching, and outdoor recreation. In the early 1800s, the Rocky Mountain Fur Trade brought trappers and traders to the Green River Valley in search of pelts while the eastern explorers were drawn west to the uncharted mountains. These mountain men endured the isolation and hazardous conditions of the mountains and made their way down to the valley in the summer.

Shane Epping - Where storms break, and rainbows rise

Biography – Shane Epping teaches at the University of Wyoming where he occupies the Bobby Model Photojournalism Professorship. Before earning a PhD and entering academia, he worked for a decade as a photojournalist, with his name appearing in The New York Times, The Washington Post, and The Wall Street Journal. His photographs have been exhibited in galleries across America, totaling 10 states in the past four years.

About The Photo – Shane has driven Highway 287 between Fort Collins and Laramie countless times over the past five years. What began as a commute has become a sustained photographic project. This image, made near the state line in September 2024, captures a rainbow emerging from a passing storm as late afternoon sun illuminates the high plains.

History – Pioneers, Wagons, and a 575 Mile Journey. The Overland Trail and Stagecoach Line was an alternate wagon route off the famous Oregon Trail. Pioneers crossed this area as they headed westward in the late 1800's. The Overland Trail (also known as the Overland Stage Line) was a stagecoach and wagon trail in the American West during the 19th century. While portions of the route had been used by explorers and trappers since the 1820's.

Adam Bowen - A quick embrace from some wild horses in the McCullough Peaks range at last light

Biography – Adam Bowen is a wildlife photographer who has been living in Cody, Wyoming for the last 2 years, spending his days guiding in Yellowstone. Photography has always been a passion of his, and Wyoming has some of the greatest wildlife he’s ever seen.

About the Photo – This photo was taken at the McCullough Peaks Wild Horse Management Area just outside of Cody. He had spent countless hours trying to photograph these wild horses from the “Red Point Band”, and on this particular evening, all the stars had aligned for a great shot!

History – Horses have a deep history in Wyoming, initially introduced by Spanish explorers in the 1500s and spreading rapidly through Indigenous trade networks, which drastically changed Plains cultures. Today, Wyoming is also known for its wild horse populations, which are descendants of these early Spanish horses and those released or escaped from ranches and trails over the centuries. The state is home to several BLM herd management areas and cultural symbols, like the legendary bucking horse Steamboat, have become icons of Wyoming’s identity.

David Otto - A Wyoming Memory

Biography – David Otto is a fourth generation rancher and works for the Natural Resources Conservation Service. His ranch, where David, his wife Ellen, and his mother Nancy reside, is located southwest of Yoder, Wyoming, and is nearly 120 years old!

About the Photo – The photo is of his wife’s 1929 Model A Ford that belonged to her great uncle. When her mother passed away she saw it in a photo and was able to track it down. She was able to return it to her family along with their 1924 Model TT truck, which she has worked to restore. This photo was taken with their ranch in the background.

History – Wyoming’s automobile history began in Laramie with Elmer Lovejoy, a bicycle shop owner who built and drove the state’s first car in May 1898, introducing personal motorized transport to a state still reliant on horses. Wyoming’s Lincoln Highway was the first transcontinental auto route, established in 1913, following the Union Pacific rail corridor across the state, serving as a precursor to I-80 and US-30, and offering historic sites like Cheyenne’s “Lincolnway,” the Henry Joy Monument, and Laramie’s Lincoln Monument at Sherman Summit, with segments still drivable today.

Phil Hilson - Echoes of Earth and History. Heart Mountain has a dual history of Ancient landslide and WWII Internment camp

Biography – Phil Hilson is a retired professional violinist and orchestra teacher who has transformed his lifelong dedication to the arts into a celebrated photographic journey. Now based in Cody, Wyoming, he turns his lens toward the wild and the timeless – the soaring grace of hawks, the glow of distant nebulae, and the rugged drama of the American West.

About the Photo – Golden wildflowers ripple across the Wyoming plains like sunlight poured onto the land. Above them rises Heart Mountain – steadfast, commanding, unforgettable. It’s very summit is a monument to Earth’s power: a colossal block of ancient limestone that slid miles from the Absaroka volcanic plateau in what scientists consider the largest known landslide on land. An event so immense that it reshaped the very story of this mountain.

But Heart Mountain holds human history, too. In its imposing shadow once stood the Heart Mountain Relocation Center, where thousands of Japanese American citizens and immigrants – families, children, veterans – were forced to live behind barbed wire during World War II. Their lives uprooted, their freedom temporarily stolen, even as the mountain remained unchanged.

Chad Coppess - Sacred eagle wings surround the sacred tower of stone

Biography – Chad Coppess spent 28 years as the official photographer for the South Dakota Department of Tourism, but sneaks over the border and spends as much time in Wyoming as he can. His interest in Old West and Native American history pulls him west quite often, and even more so now that's he retired from a second career with South Dakota Magazine. A new aspect of his photography is placing western action figures into actual historic locations, which of course means pretty much all of Wyoming.

About the Photo – Ojibwe dancer/artist Michelle Reed jumped at the chance to do a photo shoot at the sacred Mato Tipila, or Devils Tower. The gracefulness of her eagle wings and movement instantly made Chad think of the many birds he's seen circling the tower each time he visits there.

History – To understand the place called Devils Tower also requires many perspectives. Ancient peoples have lived around the Tower for thousands of years; their modern descendants still maintain a connection with this place on a physical and a spiritual level. Oral histories passed down by various American Indian tribes, as well as their present-day ceremonies, offer us important perspectives of the Tower.

Denise Hawkins - Bottles and tins from years gone by line the storefront window of an abandoned building in Shoshoni, Wyoming

Biography – Denise Hawkins is a Cheyenne-based photographer and artist. Her work is focused on landscapes, nature, and abandoned places. Her interest in documenting abandoned places has led to volunteer work for the Alliance for Historic Wyoming.

About the Photo – “Storefront Window” was taken in Shoshoni, Wyoming. Unlike the now-demolished buildings on the east side of Main Street, which were taken down in 2018 after fire and neglect left them vacant for over 30 years, the buildings on the west side of the street, including this store, are still standing.

History – Ghost towns tell tales of booms and busts from the railroad, mining (gold, coal, copper), and frontier life, leaving behind eerie ruins and remnants of once-thriving communities abandoned when resources dwindled or routes shifted. Shoshoni, Wyoming, began as a 1905 railroad town, named for the indigenous Shoshone people who long inhabited the region, but faced early setbacks like a major fire and the original Boysen Dam’s failure before becoming a gateway to the Wind River Canyon, evolving from a frontier settlement to a community deeply connected to its Shoshone heritage and rugged land.

Hongjin Li - At dawn, a herd of bison moves through the misted river

Biography – Hongjin Li is a musician and film composer based in New York City. Outside of music, she is an avid outdoor person and wildlife lover. She leads a small expedition caravan called H&F (Hongjin & Friends), dedicated to exploring the U.S. in depth and fostering cultural exchange through travel, sound, and images! This photo was taken during their 12-day Wyoming Cultural Trip.

About the Photo – The photo was taken in August, before the sunrise in Yellowstone’s Hayden Valley, a herd of American bison crossed the river through morning steam. The rising mist caught the first light, turning the valley into a moving tapestry of gold and breath—a quiet moment of wilderness awakening.

History – Yellowstone’s buffalo history is a story of near extinction and remarkable recovery: once millions strong, massive 19th-century slaughter reduced them to a tiny remnant herd (around 23) in Pelican Valley by 1900, making Yellowstone the last place they survived wild, prompting conservation efforts, including captive breeding at Lamar Buffalo Ranch, which allowed the herd to rebound and become the genetically pure, free-ranging backbone of today’s population.

Biography – Mary Whalen has lived all her life in Wyoming, including Cheyenne, Sheridan, and Laramie as a student at the University of Wyoming. She considers every day in Wyoming a photo worthy moment. Mary is the vice president of WyoPoets, and encourages others to write and think creatively. In her winning photograph, she remembers the poem, The Road Not Taken by Robert Frost. “Two roads diverged in a wood, and I took the one less traveled by. And that has made all the difference.”

About the Photo – “Enjoying Wyoming Traffic” was taken near Savery, Wyoming- near Battle Mountain and the Continental Divide. This southern region of Wyoming is especially photogenic in autumn.

History – Wyoming’s cattle drive history began in the 1850s with accidental discoveries of winter grazing, leading to a boom in the 1870s as ranchers moved Texas Longhorns north via trails like the Goodnight-Loving Trail, establishing the open range, but the Green River Drift in Sublette County remains America’s longest-running, a spring ritual moving thousands of cattle to mountain pastures, preserving a unique cowboy heritage.

Biography – Rose Fry is a state retiree who now has the time to wander and take photos. She enjoys rising early in the morning, getting in her car and traveling in whatever direction she feels at that moment. She always finds something whichever way she goes. Rose also enjoys Wyoming history. There are endless possibilities to find historical spots around Wyoming.

About the Photo – The reenactment of the Battle of the Hundred in the Hand, which was also known as the Fetterman Fight. The actual battle took place in December of 1866. The reenactment was held in April and put on by the Wyoming State Parks and the Fort Phil Kearny Bozeman Trail Association at the Fort Phil Kearny State Historic Site. “The “Fetterman fight” took place in Crow Indian treaty guaranteed land, where the Lakotas and their Indian allies were without consent from the Crows. All 81 men under the direction of Captain William Fetterman died. “

History – Fort Laramie, Fort Bridger, Fort Phil Kearny, and Fort Fetterman, were crucial to westward expansion, serving as trading posts, military outposts during the Indian Wars (especially along the Bozeman Trail), and resupply points for emigrant trails (Oregon, Mormon, California, Pony Express)

McKenzy Ellisen - Under the Lights in Meeteetse, Wyoming

Biography – McKenzie grew up in Seattle, where she first learned photography in a darkroom before moving into digital work. At 19 she relocated to Wyoming and began photographing local brandings and gathers. She's driven by a passion for preserving the western lifestyle, from the energy of rodeos to quiet moments beneath the northern lights.

About the Photo – Under the Lights was taken on a whim. The subject, Quannah, and McKenzie, rode to the top of a hill on Hoggs Black Diamond Ranch in Meeteetse. After taking in the lights for a few minutes they got to work. McKenzie laid on the ground, and Q tried to keep the horses as still as possible while McKenzie took photos. Out of 104 photos that she took that evening, this was one of three that turned out. Even cowboys get to enjoy the Northern Lights every once in a while.

History – Wyoming's northern lights history shows they're a rare but spectacular sight, with major recent displays in November 2025 and May 2024 caused by powerful geomagnetic storms from solar flares, delighting residents with vibrant colors from Cheyenne to Jackson Hole, even surprising experienced observers with their intensity and early appearance.
