Are The Abnaks Vermont's Dispossessed?

The Abnaks, who are the original inhabitants of Vermont, have been dispossessed of their land and culture. The state has taken control of their land and resources, and the Abnakis are now living in poverty. This is a violation of their rights as a people, and it is time for Vermont to take responsibility for its actions.

The Abnaks have a rich history and culture, and they should be recognized as a sovereign nation. The state should work with the Abnaks to develop a plan for their return to their land and the restoration of their way of life. This will be a difficult process, but it is necessary for the well-being of all Vermonters.

The Abnaks are not asking for charity, but for justice. They want to be treated as equals, with the same rights and opportunities as other Vermonters. This is a basic human right, and it is time for Vermont to live up to its values.

We stand in solidarity with the Abnaks and call on the state to take action to right this wrong. The Abnaks are our neighbors, and we have a responsibility to ensure that they are treated fairly. This is a matter of justice, and it is time for the state to act.
