GamePlay With Keith Brown

Mondays | 7pm | 90.5 FM

Starting August 2, explore the world of music from video games, which has come a long way in their games' 40+ years of entertainment. We talked with host, Keith Brown, about the program

Q: What do you think is the biggest preconceived notion about "video game music?"

Host Keith Brown: I'd say it's the perception that video game music is all "beeps and boops:" repetitive lo-fi chip sounds, catchy tunes without substance. This couldn't be further from the truth.

Video game music is incredibly rich and eclectic, ranging from sweeping orchestral scores to glowing synthesizer soundscapes, jazz, pop, rock, traditional music from all over the world and so much more. There's not just something for everyone, there's tons for everyone!

Q: Since GamePlay begins in August here in mid-Michigan, what are some "beginner" favorite scores you'd recommend?

How much space do you have? Jessica Curry's Everybody's Gone to the Rapture. Curry's music is so lyrical, haunting and heartfelt. It just glows. She combines a chamber music feel with gorgeous vocal writing for chorus in a soundtrack partly inspired by Vaughan Williams, Delius and Durufle.

Nobuo Uematsu/Masashi Hamauzu: Final Fantasy. It's a treasure trove of amazing melodies for Tchaikovsky/sweeping orchestra/classic film score fans.

Jazz fans! Kristofer Maddigan's Cuphead is a three-hour score of original ragtime/'30s style swing played by utterly fab musicians and contains tributes to artists from Cab Calloway to Duke and way more. It's utterly infectious and brilliant.
