

If I Made The World by Adeleyah Mehlig

If I made the world it would be free of sorrow
And you wouldn't have to worry about tomorrow
Because tomorrow would always come
And there would be no need to feel numb.
You would always be fulfilled
And there would never be any blood being spilled.

If I made the world there would be no wonder
That your heart would crack like thunder
Because there would be no heartless deny
And you would feel no need to cry.
Life would always be easy
And you would never feel queasy.

If the world was mine
You would not be scared to run out of time
Because our loved ones would always be there
And life would always feel fair.
There would be no warfare
And there would be no shots fired through the air.

If the world was mine there would be no hate,
You would truly never have to worry about your fate
Because lies and hurt would be an unknown blur
Because there would never be a need for them to occur.
You wouldn't need to worry about your mental health,
Nor would you ever have to worry about your wealth.

If I made the world people wouldn't be distant in schools
Because they wouldn't feel like fools.
You wouldn't be called names
And they wouldn't make useless claims.
You wouldn't be shamed
And you would never be blamed.

If I made the world you wouldn't feel the weight on your shoulders
That is often heavy like boulders.
Nor would you feel the familiar tightness of anxiety in your chest

That feels often like a sickening confidence test.
There would be no lasting grief
And your heart won't shrivel like a dying leaf.

If the world was made by me you wouldn't crave love
Because it would be omnipresent, yet pure like a dove.
Your faith would never slack
And there would be no need to look back.
