The letter I am writing is about losing your grandparents. I lost one of them recently last month due to a car accident. Losing a grandparent is one of the worst pains you will ever experience. No matter what anyone says, you will never heal from it. The lump that sits in the back of your throat everytime you think about them, hear their name or see a picture or a video of them, the pain in your heart never leaves. After weeks of trying to move on the memories remain so strong, knowing you’ll never be able to see them again. It’s like a piece of your heart is missing and it will always be gone forever. So if you still have your grandparents don’t take them for granted. Hug them tighter, listen to their beautiful stories, enjoy their company because you’ll never know when life will take away one who meant the most. What blows my mind till this day was the last words I said to my grandmother. “I love you and I’ll see you soon” not knowing that’d be the last time I’d see her. So spend time with them before its too late.
