During the dark days of the COVID-19 pandemic, our KPBX performance studio went dark. Placing a wide range of singers and instrumentalists and sharing their work with listeners in a way that resonates, we’ve enjoyed a solo artisty of classical guitarist and retiured U of I professor James Reid as well as the brilliant ensemble work of the Spokane String Quartet and the Michal Palzewicz Trio, each from very different places on the musical spectrum.

Our Yamaha piano has had a workout, as a variety of pianists has enlightened and entertained us. One of Spokane’s music scene’s most adored pianists and performers is a regular member. We’ve also heard from brilliant solo artists Yun Jourg Park, pianist and composer Cheryl Green, and our youngest contributor, 13-year-old Daniel Beal.

Piano collaborating with other instruments has been a regular occurrence too, most notably through our visits from EWU music major students and a pair of fine sessions with Whitworth University piano professor Judith Schoepflin and her instrumental colleagues.

And let’s not forget musical theatre! The first quarter of 2023 has been a busy one, with visits (and performances!) from Stage Left Theatre (Sweeney Todd, Spokane Civic Theatre (Jersey Boys), and Aspire Community Theatre (All Shook Up)).

Yes, it’s been busy, but it’s what we do and what we enjoy doing: sharing fine performances with you, the listener. While there is an undeniable magic to hearing these performances as they happen, we are truly pleased to offer a chance to capture the essence of these (and see some video clips as well) at SpokanePublicRadio.org.

Check back often for more concerts, events and performances, and great music and conversation, and stay tuned: we’ve got more for you—with an increased video presence—as we continue through 2023—the year the music came back!
