Tamara Keith is a Senior White House Correspondent at NPR and co-hosts the NPR Politics Podcast, the top political news podcast in America. She is also a regular contributor to PBS NewsHour, appearing each week as part of its Politics Monday segment.

Keith chronicled the final years of the Obama administration, covered Hillary Clinton's failed bid for president and threw herself into documenting the first Trump administration, from policy made by tweet to the president's COVID diagnosis, January 6th and the present.

In 2018, Keith was elected to serve on the board of the White House Correspondents' Association, then served as its president in 2022/23 during a momentous term that included a complete overhaul of the press workspace at the White House. She also worked to demystify the White House beat for the public in an effort to help restore trust in the press, an essential pillar of American democracy.

Previously, Keith covered the congress for NPR with an emphasis on House Republicans, the budget, taxes, and the fiscal fights that dominated at the time. Keith joined NPR in 2009 as a Business Reporter. In early 2010, she was on the ground in Haiti covering the aftermath of the country's disastrous earthquake, and later she covered the oil spill in the Gulf.

Keith earned a bachelor's degree in philosophy from the University of California, Berkeley, and a master's degree at the UCB Graduate School of Journalism. She serves on advisory boards for the University of California Center for Free Speech and Civic Engagement and the UC Berkeley J-School.
