

A Reverse Aubade

You return to bed each morning.

I put my head on your chest, ask if you have any stories.

You tell me about the cardinal, go on about the raccoon, the squirrels.

Some day, I'll want to remember the tone of your voice

the thump of your heart

the rise and fall of your chest.